

A builder is called out by an old gentleman to fix a front door that's not closing properly. Rather than just adjusting the latch and sorting out the problem, he replaces the whole lock and charges three times the cost, plus a half day for labour rather than for just an hour's work.

You sell your car knowing it's got a dodgy gearbox, covering up the crunching noise by putting sawdust in the gearbox!

You advertise a holiday let at a house using photos of a lovely, but different, house from an estate agent's website.
When people get there
the house is not a holiday home.

A pest controller is called out to a home as the owner has found mouse droppings in the cupboard.

They turn out to be coffee granules, so the pest controller says there is no problem and no charge.

You find a wallet on the ground with cash in it, but you take it to the police station with all the cash in it.

You get off the bus, but the bus driver calls after you saying that you've left your laptop on the seat.

You say it's not yours and give a description of the person sitting where the laptop was found.
